What should I expect during testing?

Electrodes will be placed on the patient's face to obtain recordings. The test consists of three parts. First, you will be asked to watch a series of lights on a wall. Next, you will be asked to turn your head in several different positions sitting up and laying down. Finally, your ears will be irrigated with warm and cool water or air. The responses will be recorded by a computer and analyzed by the Audiologist. This analysis will be conducted after the patient has left the clinic. Some people experience slight dizziness or unsteadiness during the testing; therefore, it is suggested that you arrange for someone to drive you home after the testing is completed, if possible. You may also want to bring something small to eat after the testing and any medications you needed to skip for the morning or day. The ENG testing should take about 1 hour and 15 minutes.
